Scientific publishing is hacked

Leonid Schneider

Independent science journalist

In science, crime does pay. The rewards for fabricating your research results and your CV are huge, the dangers of negative consequences even if caught are negligent. In my seminar, I will tell you how widespread research misconduct is, where it comes from, and how universities and scientific journals fail to deal with it. I will also talk about Plan S, the dark side of the Open Access business, the Chinese paper mills and how the predatory publishing and predatory conference industry thrives on academic vanity.
